
Buying and Selling a Privately Held Business

April 27, 2010

Flaster Greenberg

More than 700,000 businesses change ownership each year, according to the U.S. Small Business Administration. Most are small- and mid-sized businesses. Many factors can lead to the decision to sell a business, such as retirement, partnership disputes, health concerns or new business pursuits. Such transactions do not take place, however, without careful planning and preparation.

On Tuesday, April 27, a free seminar is being offered for those considering the purchase or sale of a business. Steve Greenberg, chair of Flaster Greenberg's Corporate Practice Group, will provide an overview of the sale process, examining how to position a company for sale, assess its value, negotiate a favorable sales agreement and other key documents, and close the deal.

Topics include:

- Establishing negotiation objectives and parameters
- Letters of intent and other key documents
- Allocation of purchase price
- Employee relationships and compensation
- Valuation
- Stock vs. asset sales
- Payment methods
- Warranties, obligations and liabilities
