A Message From Our Department Chair, Jeff Cohen

The events of 2020 have created unprecedented change for our firm, the courts in which we practice and, most importantly, our clients. One thing that has not changed is our dedication to our clients and the manner in which we manage their cases. We have always been on the cutting edge of technology, making the transition to life in the age of the pandemic smoother. Our professionals have also quickly adjusted to using technology to communicate with the courts, arguing cases at the trial and appellate court levels, conducting video and telephone depositions and participating in conferences with judges, mediators, our clients and other professionals. As we continue to work through these fast changing times, we will continue to be here for you, our valued clients, and will help you navigate the legal issues that come with these circumstances.

Is Your Business Prepared for the California Consumer Protection Act?

The CCPA is one of the strongest and most comprehensive consumer data privacy laws in the country. It is designed to protect the data privacy rights of citizens living in California, and can thus impact any business that has customers in California. Businesses do not need to have locations in California to be impacted by the new California Consumer Protection Act, but do need to meet certain requirements. Will your business be impacted on July 1? Click here to learn more.
In an effort to help clients avoid unwanted penalties, Flaster Greenberg attorneys can review privacy policies for CCPA compliance. Please contact Krishna Jani or Donna Urban of Flaster Greenberg's Privacy & Data Security Group to ensure your business is up-to-date with the current privacy laws or if you are unsure whether your business is exempt from the CCPA.

NJ Dunkin' Donuts Stores Escape Bakery's Antitrust Suit

Flaster Greenberg attorney Jeff Cohen won a significant antitrust case for his clients, a group of independent franchisees of Dunkin Donuts and a South Jersey central manufacturing baking facility, in a lawsuit brought by another proposed central baking facility that claimed there was a monopoly in the region. The plaintiff erroneously claimed the franchisees boycotted the creation of the would-be Trenton bakery in order to maintain their market share in South Jersey. On May 31st, a federal judge ruled in favor of Flaster Greenberg's clients, finding that there was no inappropriate anti-competitive conduct to block Plaintiff from opening its own baking facility and, therefore, dismissing the lawsuit on summary judgment.

The story was covered in Law360. FG Litigation Chair Jeff Cohen is quoted in the article stating, We are pleased that the Court found no basis for Plaintiffs claims and confirmed that my clients did not engage in any anti-competitive conduct. The findings in this case also affirm that parties of one business are free to make their own decisions not to invest in another business without fear of retribution in the form of claims of violation of antitrust law.

SCOTUS Rules Discrimination Against LGBTQ Employees is Discrimination on the Basis of Sex

In a landmark decision, the Supreme Court of the United States ruled discrimination against LGBTQ employees violates Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. The 6-3 ruling is significant in that it did not rely on technical grounds, but rather on the legal analysis that disparate treatment of employees based on sexual orientation or gender identity is, by definition, discrimination based on sex.
The message to businesses is clear: Title VII does not condone discrimination based on sexual orientation or gender identity and that is also likely true of an array of other anti-discrimination laws.
