

Hot Tips in Family Law: "Rules are made to be broken: exceptions, dissents and loopholes"

November 11, 2013

New Jersey Institute for Continuing Legal Education

Presented in cooperation with the NJSBA Family Law Section

While all Family Part matters have common characteristics, every divorce, custody case, division of property or support action are unique because a family is involved. What is suitable practice in the majority of cases may be completely wrong for others, and exceptional cases may often require unique solutions. Recognizing your case's uniqueness and knowing when to step out of bounds are key elements in successful matrimonial litigation.

Some rules are simply made to be broken, and knowing when and how to break them is the mark of a seasoned and thoughtful family law practitioner.

This year's fast-paced Hot Tips in Family Law highlights unique situations when you should consider stepping "out of bounds". Our panelists are skilled family law practitioners who will share their considerable experience about when to break rules and step outside the perimeter of routine practice in pursuit of the right result for your client.
