Marty Judge, Chair of FG's Environmental and Real Estate Law Departments, will serve as a speaker for the upcoming NJICLE presentation "Handling Natural Resource Damages Claims in New Jersey: A Practical Guide To Get the Best Results For & Protect The Clients You Represent" in New Brunswick, NJ.

New Jersey is grappling with the toxic residue of its industrial past while simultaneously navigating the strains of overpopulation. With 114 Superfund sites, including some of the most dangerous accumulations of chemical waste in all of America, New Jersey holds the distinction of having the most superfund sites in the nation (even though it is the 4th smallest state). Worse yet, according to a 2018 report by the American Lung Association, in certain areas air pollution in New Jersey is so bad it could be dangerous to your health to breathe, and New Jersey's air continues to be among the most polluted in the nation, with a large swath of the state receiving failing grades for smog.

This half-day seminar will help attendees learn how to navigate the issues inherent in NRD litigation, including the science and valuation of claims, strategies for recovering under insurance policies. As an attendee, you'll walk away with concrete strategies you can put to work immediately in many of the transactions you're already handling.
