

Cardiovascular Logistics and Cardiology Consultants of Philadelphia Announce Partnership to Expand Access to Cardiovascular Care in Southeastern Pennsylvania

Press Release

April 14, 2025

Agreement brings more than 90 cardiologists, 50 advanced practice providers, and 30 locations into the national platform

Cardiovascular Logistics (CVL), a national, physician-owned, physician-led cardiovascular platform, today announced a partnership with Cardiology Consultants of Philadelphia (CCP), the largest independent cardiology practice in the United States.

This partnership expands CVL's footprint from about 300 to 440 providers and grows its team from 2,100 to 2,800 members dedicated to CVL's mission to provide its patients with the highest quality cardiovascular care available.

Based in Southeastern Pennsylvania, CCP has more than 90 cardiologists and over 50 advanced practitioners across 30 locations. The practice is affiliated with major hospitals in the region and provides care to patients in all five Southeastern Pennsylvania counties. With a history dating back more than 30 years, CCP is widely recognized for its advanced cardiac imaging capabilities and its broad geographic footprint, which places millions of patients within a 15-minute drive of care. The practice also emphasizes timely access, ensuring patients are seen quickly rather than facing long wait times.

Flaster Greenberg Shareholder Steve Greenberg said: "It's been an incredible privilege to support CCP for almost four decades and help it grow from four physicians to over 140 providers practicing the highest level of cardiology. CCP has always prided itself on its accessibility to patients throughout the region and its ability to bring them cutting edge technology in both diagnostics and therapeutic care. The transaction with Cardiovascular Logistics is designed to continue and enhance these fundamental goals while enabling CCP to maintain its independence and primary focus on patient care. As CCP's legal counsel, knowing that this partnership will improve access to high-quality care for thousands of cardiac patients in the Delaware Valley makes this achievement especially rewarding both professionally and personally."

In addition to its clinical capacity, CCP is a leader in value-based care (VBC), participating in bundled payment models such as BPCI and BPCI Advanced, as well as unique VBC with both commercial and managed Medicaid payers. The practice also has significant strength in interventional cardiology and electrophysiology, with over 20 physicians performing advanced procedures such as catheter-based interventions and cardiac ablations.

“This is a pivotal moment not just for our organization, but for cardiovascular care nationwide,” said David Konur, chief executive officer of CVL. “CCP is a clinical and operational leader in its region, and our partnership reflects a shared commitment to fundamentally changing how cardiovascular care is delivered in the United States.”

Mark Victor, M.D., chief executive officer of CCP and new president of the Mid-Atlantic region of CVL, said the partnership reflects a long-term alignment around clinical excellence and patient-centric care.

“We’re proud to join forces with CVL and to be part of a platform that puts patients and quality care first while investing in innovation,” Dr. Victor said. “This partnership allows us to preserve our independence while gaining access to the resources and infrastructure needed to grow and continue leading the field of cardiovascular medicine.”

“This announcement comes at a time of growing demand for cardiovascular care,” said Craig M. Walker, M.D., chief medical officer of CVL. “An aging population and the increasing prevalence of conditions such as heart failure, atrial fibrillation, and peripheral vascular disease are placing additional strain on providers, while shifting care models and emerging technologies are creating new challenges—and opportunities—for independent cardiology practices. By combining CCP’s regional depth with CVL’s national scale and infrastructure, the partnership is positioned to meet this rising demand with expanded access, enhanced care delivery, and a sustainable model for cardiovascular excellence.”
