realized locally, and the money we hope to raise for [the agency] will be spent locally." Phil Kirchner and his wife, Karen, reside in Haddonfield, NJ with their sons John and Matthew.

Chief Thomas J. Garrity, Jr. BA, CPM, CIT

Tom Garrity has been the chief of police in Collingswood, NJ since 1996. After the death of an inmate with mental illness at the Camden County Jail in 2004, Tom became interested in working with the mental health community to create a jail diversion program for persons with mental illness. He joined The MHASWNJ Board of Directors in May of 2006 to help foster that relationship. Shortly after joining the board of directors, Tom learned about an innovative police program entitled "CIT" (Crisis Intervention Team) that was being used in Memphis, TN. The CIT diversion model is a partnership between the police department, advocacy groups (such as The MHASWNJ), and the mental health system. Law enforcement officers volunteer to participate in a 40-hour training program that teaches them how to recognize psychiatric and substance abuse problems, de-escalation techniques, and how to link individuals to resources in the community. He comments that "I see this program [CIT] and the area of [mental health] as the next big ground shift for law enforcement. It changes the way we deal with people suffering with mental illness and it provides a better service to the people in need as well as their families." He resides in Collingswood, NJ with his wife, Rose, and two children, son TJ and daughter Lara.

Rose W. Chin, MBA

Rose Chin is the principal at CARAT Juroca, a consultation firm that works with non-profit organizations and small businesses in applying core business skills to impact efficiency and effectiveness.
